FURTHER STUDY OF 'EL' CONTROL ACT ADVOCATED

Investigation Into Present Policy Asked by Majority of Committee

JOINT REPORT FILED IN THE LEGISLATURE

Minority Asks Public Control System Be Extended for 20-Year Period.

Further study by the Legislature on the question of extending the Public Control Act under which the Boston Elevated Street Railway Company is now operating and which expires in 1928 is the recom-mendation of the majority members of the Joint Special Committee of the Legislature in the report of the committee which was filed today at the State House. Five legislators signed the majority report.

The minority report, signed by four members of the committee, recommends that the public control act vated will be able within that time to be in a position where it can finance its operation without state aid or

Favors Improvements

The majority of the members say:
In brief, the committee has concluded that there are a number of desirable improvements for which capital should be available within the not remote future. The method by which much needed capital is to be raised, if a far-sighted plan is to be adopted, involves at one and the same time the guestions of termination, modification, or extension of modification, or extension public control, of complete public ownership, and of the erection of a transportation district. These questions are inter-related and inseparable. They involve probems of great complexity and of the highest statecraft. No decision con-cerning public control should be made without the fullest examination, from every angle, of complete public ownership and of further steps toward public ownership; and or public ownership; and or public ownership; and or public ownership should be made without the most careful consideration of the need for a transportation district and of the powers. duties, and political structure and control of such district, if created.

Its operations have culminated in Bet-ter Home Week demonstrations. which have been conducted by thes communities to show how building. furnishing and owning of private homes by the people at large can be encouraged. The movement has in-creased threefold in three years. The next campaign heading up in May, 1925, is already under way.

Indication of the growth of interest in this direction is shown in the comparative figures of 1923 and 1924 Better Homes Week demonstrations. In 1923 there were 57 cities which reported detailed figures for their demonstration houses and the average cost of these was $8150; while for the 1924 Better Homes Week, 84 cities submitting cost figures showed for 108 demonstration houses an average cost of $7060.

The 1924 demonstrations included 18 houses, costing from $1500 to $3000, as against three in the 1923 Better Homes Week. There were 13 demonstration houses used in the 1924 demonstration which cost from $3001 to $4500, as against nine of this class in the 1923 Better Homes Week in the group of houses ranging in cost from $4501 to $6000, the 1924 Better Homes Week included 18, as

The Joys of Florida

When Winter comes and throughout the land the snow files thick and fast—when ice and sleet lay hold of city and town, when trains are late and roads are blocked, when everyone is chilled and all the world seems frozen fast in Winter's icy grip—then it's time to think of Florida!

No ice or snow, no overcoats or furs, just the balmy temperature of June. Flowers and their fragrance fill the air, the golfer makes a new low score, bathers bask in golden sunshine, the motor tourist visits orange grove and lake and a thousand natural wonders—life is at its best and beauty reaches heights unknown in northern climes.

By all means visit Florida and Miami this winter, and remember that Florida at its best is Coral Gables. Mismi's Master Suburb, $15,000,000 has been spent to make Coral Gables a joy to visitor or resident. Magnificent entrances and plazas, two golf courses and clubhouses, Venetian Bathing Pool, tennis courts, hotels and apartment hotels, tea-gardens, marble dance floors and five hundred beautiful homes of rare Spanish style, you must see Coral Gables to appreciate its beauty. You must live there to know all of the joys of a real home in Florida.

A most welcome feature is the inclusion of not a few autochrome plates that go far toward expressing the element without which we can obtain no adequate idea of what gardens actually are: that of color in all its infinite variety. Fortunately the qualities of texture and of values are so well conveyed by the well rendered half-tones that somehow the imagination is enabled to go far in supplying the color that we know is

Excellent Text

Photography, necessarily at pres ent limited to "stills." makes it essential to confine its depictions of garden scenery, as here set forth, to limited subjects that by nature are incidental or episodical, although occasionally, as when the environment of a given scene, with its interesting details, is included, the pic ture becomes beautifully panoramic

The author's excellent and appreciative text greatly helps an understanding of the plates. She notes that under certain conditions it is impossible to do justice to a subject, which is sometimes composed of several connecting sections, each bringing a surprised delight to the visitor passing from one to another "but only a series of pictures can portray such a garden.

The geographical classification of this book is most helpful in showing the proportionate distribution of the best examples over the country. The New England states have the largest representation in this book, owing to the fact that the climate of nucauses many of the inhabitants to find summer homes near the north lic as the trusted friend of Venizelos, and a convinced supporter of the Atlantic seaboard. "plots which beautify hundreds of hamlets in this section."

Massachusetts is preëminent: we are told that probably no other section of the Union contains so many gardens, old and new. But in many other states there is a notable showing. Long Island, N. Y., is remarkrich in the beauty and other magnificent development of its gar dens. On Shelter Island is what is probably the oldest garden in New York State: Sylvester Manor, now the property of Miss Cornelia Horsford, whose ancestor, Nathaniel Sylvester, came with his young bride from England in 1651 and here planted the box which is still one of the wonders of the place.

We find a peculiarly individual charm in many Southern gardens. In South Carolina there are few new gardens, "but an untold number of old ones, deserving to be revived." Magnolia-on-the-Ashley, when its azaleas are out, is considered one of the world's most beautiful sights, has a garden section that extends the length of its coast, and possibly 50

Do You Speak Correct English? Or Do You Only Think You Do?

You owe yourself time for selfculture. Study the MILLER SYSa basis. You can never rise to the top in business or society, in club, church or lodge unless you speak and write correct English. The MILLER SYSTEM is bright, brief and practical with entertainment and variety that will hold your attention. Look it over without obligation and BE YOUR OWN JUDGE.

Does Your English Embarrass or Betray You? Be sure you "say it" in good English, otherwise your little mistakes will detract from your message, or you will give a wrong impression of yourself and the cause you represent. Your ease among educated persons depends upon your confidence in your own speech. You cannot afford to speak poor English.

Are you sure that unconsciously you do not use slipshod grammar and incorrect pronunciation? Through study of the MILLER SYSTEM OF CORRECT ENGLISH for cultured speech—business or social—you can eliminate all doubt and speak with assurance in any company. Test yourself with the expressions in the columns below. Is your speech free qf

STOCK PRICE TREND IS UP DURING WEEK

Demand for Securities Continues Large-Most Factors Favorable

NEW YORK, Jan. 17 (Special)-The general trend of stocks was up-ward, and the transactions were on a large scale, as has been true for many

This was the case without important news developments of a direct and general bearing on stocks, with the exception of the unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation at the end of December.

As the announcement of the figures wt; not made until noon last Satur-day, it could be spoken of as prac-tically a development of the present

Although opportunity was offered to consider a surprisingly large increase of more than 780,000 tons over the week-end, it is interesting to note that, contrary to expectations, United States Steel common stock did not open on Monday morning much above Saturday's close.

Saturday's close.

Later, however, the tonnage figures undoubtedly were an important factor in the trading in that issue throughout the week, and likewise in the market for industrial stocks as a whole.

Outlook is Bright No thoughtful observer of business conditions can possibly become pessimistic over those now existing, or over the outlook for several months to come at least, when he realizes that the business of the United States Steel Forporation increased to that extent within a single month, and also when within a single month, and also when the knows that during the week just closing its operations averaged fully per cent of capacity. There may be somewhat of a lull in the steel industry for a little time, as was reported in trade circles several days ago. Even if there is, all the important steel manufacturing com-panies will have sufficient business to keep them busy for some time. The stock market has not been altogether one-sided. The reactions, however, did not carry stocks downward as far as might have been expected. pected. Although on one or two occasions the price losses ranged from 1 to 4 points in the active industrial shares, they must be regarded as small in comparison with the advances in the last 10 weeks.

Brevity of Reactions

Brevity of Reactions

One of the most interesting and sig-nificant features of these temporary the promptness with which a great majority of the active stocks recovered. Just yesterday afternoon, following quite a sharp reaction, the market turned upward in the last hour to such an extent that many of the earlier declines were eliminated and some of the active stocks closed with net gains for the day. Whenever the reactions occurred, it was generally agreed that they were due, and were the result more of the technical position of the market itself-than of any unfavorable developments here or abroad. That there were no eal slumps was taken as substantial evidence that the upward movement was not over and that there was still an extensive buying power in the case 11064 of a good many stocks. Some rather impatient speculators who would like to see the upward movement continue indefinitely and wide fluctuations in stocks every day, we exactly hours for extilder day. are eagerly hoping for striking developments at frequent intervals that would make such things possible.

The more conservative element suggests that every one should be satisfied with the kind of market that we had this week, particularly in view of the length of time that the upward movement already has been in prog-

One of the most encouraging fea-tures of the market for the whole week was the outstanding strength of week was the outstanding strength of the oil shares without any apparent effort to bring about a wild speculation in them. On the contrary it seemed to take a natural course, based largely supon the decidedly stronger position of the industry, and the outlook for even better conditions during the coming months. The advances an-nounced in the prices of gasoline and further reports, indicating that the stocks are of both crude oil and gaso-line are being drawn upon even by line are being drawn upon even by some of the largest producers, called attention to the great contrast between conditions now and those six months

What has been said with respect to the oil industry, applies in a general way to the automotive industry. The stocks of companies prominent in the latter acted much in the same way as the petroleum shares did. Although there has been some talk of the satura-tion point in the buying of automobiles having been reached, the prevailing opinion is that the demand will continue heavy. Those at the head of the industry realize that competition will

DRY GOODS TRADE BETTER

John V. Farwell Company, Chicago, in its weekly review of trade, says: Wholesale drygoods business continues to show increased activity in line with general trade improvement. Normal winter weather is helping retailers' clearance of heavy apparel lines. Buyers have been in market in much larger numbers than during the corresponding half month in January of last year.

Sharpe, reviewing zinc conditions throughout the world, says that though the industry twice experienced periods of depression in 1924, the outlook for 1925 is particularly bright. For some months to come, Mr. Sharpe believes, Europe will have to buy 10,000 tons of zinc a month in the United States.

GENERAL TONE OF MARKET IS FAIRLY STRONG

Nash Motors the Spectacular Feature-Movement in Bonds Narrow

Speculators for the advance regained control of the price movement in today's New York stock market, in today's New York stock market, practically all groups participating in a broad buying movement.

With many weak accounts eliminated by the recent reactions, and the technical position improved through the extension of the short interest, operators for the rise found little difficulty in bidding up their favorite issues

Nash Motors was the spectacular feature, soaring 19 points to 285 and then breaking to 270. Commercial Solvents A advanced 7½ points and the B 5%, while Jersey Central American Radiator, Associated Dry Goods, Sears Roebuck, General Electric, American Sugar Refining, Delaware & Hudson and Federal Light & Traction preferred sold 3 to 5 points above tion preferred sold 3 to 5 points above last night's closing figures.

The closing was strong. Total sales approximated 800,000 shares.

Bond prices fluctuated within narrow and irregular limits in today's early trading.

early trading.

Wall Street's hopeful attitude regarding a resumption of Mexican debt payments was reflected in the further improvement of Mexican bonds, but other foreign obligations showed little change.

Some of the railroad issues, including Chesapeake & Ohio convertible 5s, Seaboard 6s and Chicago Great West-ern 4s, worked moderately higher. The Sinclair Crude Oil Purchasing Company calling two note issues, is expected to offer $50,000,000 new three-year 6 per cent notes next week at a slight discount.

WHEAT STRONG, WITH CORN MAKING NEW HIGH FOR SEASON

CHICAGO, Jan. 17—Fresh upturns in the price of wheat took place early today owing largely to indications of further export business and to assertions that Russia would need to purchase 9,000,000 bushels of wheat for feeding nurroses.

In the price of wheat look place early trather export business and to assert them flat Russis would need to purpose the process of the control of the contro

"Well, I haven't been watered any more than you have been," returned the crab-clawed cactus, "but I'm going to do my best with the water I've had. And perhaps when they see how splendidly I am growing they will think of me."

So the crab-clawed cactus put as much cheerfulness as it could into its heart, and actually began to send out funny little bumps from the tips of its leaves. A thrill of pride ran through it when a little girl came in the sunshine. Sue turned them was bathed in sunlight. Every day she came to them and talked softly to them. In what does the true wealth of a people, or of a nation, consist? The question has perti-nence just now when statisticians at Washington are giving forth glowing estimates of the increase in the wealth of the United States in the last decade. We learn that, estimated in the value of such material possessions as real estate, manufactured products, personal property, automobiles and the like, the wealth of that Nation in 1922 may be estimated at $320,803,862,000-a total of course baffling to the average human understanding. This figure represents, so the financial statisticians say, an increase of over 72 per cent for the decade.

We wonder how many people, just plain average people, are feeling richer today than they did ten years ago. Not many, probably. Among men of business, even in the humbler walks, ten years of effort and of experience should bring greater earning power and more generous incomes. But many of those whose wealth has been thus seemingly increased complain that it has brought them little more real prosperity, little if any more leisure. Probably in any group of middle-aged men the period of 1912-1914 will be looked back upon as a time of a greater richness of life, a more substantial prosperity, than today.

To some extent this is explainable by the decreased purchasing power of money at the present time. Compared with 1912 the dollar has a value today of but 67 cents, according to most conservative statisticians. Measured in dollars the wealth of the Nation may indeed have increased by 72 per cent. Measured by the purchasing power of those dollars the increase was far less substantial.

But were this increase in the money value of the Nation's possessions all that is claimed for it, does it stand as a true index to the increase in the Nation's wealth? Have the more substantial qualities of human brotherhoodsympathy, enthusiasm, love for one's fellows at home or abroad-kept pace with the multiplication of dollars in the American Republic? There are those who think that the Nation was never so rich as when its people were going to the bottom of their pockets, giving until it hurt, to supply money for the struggle against the attack on civilization in Europe. There are sentimentalists who feel that their Nation can never give such proof of its wealth as when it sent its young manhood by the hundreds of thousands into the battle against autocracy. Somehow it is hard to feel that a nation whose official mind is centered upon collecting debts from impoverished allies in a common war is indeed 72 per cent richer than that same nation was when its people stood ready to give without stinting of life and treasure, that victory might be won.

It is no easier for the nation having great possessions to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven than it was for the young man in the Gospels. It is as possible for an entire people as it is for a single individual to gain the whole world and lose its own soul. If the friendship and admiration of the world be sacrificed, what material wealth can make good the loss? The nation which only stands guard over its moneybags is poor indeed. Happily the United States by its generous contributions for the alleviation of distress in almost every part of the world has established at least a partial defense against the charge of utter selfishness. But with so much of the world in the abyss, the publication of glowing figures of the fatness of the American pocketbook implies that still more might be done-and done even more in the name of Justice than of Charity.

Reference to data compiled by sympathetic commentators serves to confirm the recollec-

tion that Senator Edward I. Edwards of New Jersey, formerly Governor of that State, came into national prominence through his efforts in leading the fight for state rights as against constitutional prohibition of the liquor traffic by national enactment. Mr. Edwards himself has never attempted, so far as known, to conceal this fact. He indeed has sought, not infrequently, to make political capital of his more or less successful efforts to arouse public sentiment in opposition to the generally approved enforcement policy. In November, 1919, after having served six years as State Controller, he was nominated by the Democratic Party and elected Governor on what was denominated a "personal liberty" platform. Shortly thereafter the Legislature passed a bill which sought to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer of an alcoholic content of 3.50 per cent, whereas the congressional enactment limited the alcoholic content of all beverage liquors to less than one-half of 1 per cent.

One result of this campaign was that New Jersey not only declined to ratify the Eighteenth Amendment, but formally rejected it, thus figuratively showing what was regarded as an unwelcome intruder the exit leading to the back door of the State House. In the election of 1922 Mr. Edwards, then Governor, was elected to the United States Senate, probably in part, at least, as a reward for his service in the cause of "personal liberty" and "state rights." In the meantime both the state and federal courts had declared New Jersey's beer law invalid because of its failure to exercise powers concurrent with those defined in the congressional enactment. But now comes Senator Edwards, with four more years of service as a United States Senator before him, to say that the Eighteenth Amendment can never be repealed. He is quoted, however, as saying that he believes the Volstead Act will eventually be greatly modified. Thus at least partial light seems to have dawned after a season in which the clouds of prejudice darkened the political vision of one who, perhaps conscientiously, sought to prove himself a leader of a lost cause. But even more significant is the Senator's quoted admission that the time is not ripe for the introduction in Congress of a bill repealing or modifying the present law and increasing the alcoholic content of beverages that can be legally dispensed. This will be discouraging to the hopes of the despairing members of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, for they must have believed that in Senator Edwards they had a stanch and constant champion. These defenders of the wet faith perhaps recall the fact that Senator Edwards, while still Governor of New Jersey, though manfully approving the legislative act repealing his own invalid beer law, and admitting that the Volstead Act supersedes any state enactment affecting the liquor traffic, took occasion to observe: "However, I might point out to the people of this State that in action by the federal Congress lies the only hope of liberalization of the un-democratic and un-American thought enacted into law by the Volstead Act." Now, for the present at least, that hope seems deferred. According to the Senator, assuming that he has been correctly quoted.

the time for this liberalization has not yet come. Surely if the time has not come, it will never arrive. The more this so-called liberalization of thought is urged the less convincing are the arguments in favor of the return of the saloon. The American people, if indeed they ever doubted the wisdom of their action, have been convinced by visible proof that emancipation from the slavery of drink can never come through any "liberalization" of the law, the effectiveness of which will be shown with its more complete enforcement.

It is evident that the problem of the inter-allied debts is rapidly coming to the forefront as one of the most serious problems which confront the nations in their search for prosperity and peace. More and more people are coming to see that the restoration of normal international commercial intercourse is no more possible without a settlement of the inter-allied debt question than it was without a settlement of the reparations question.

According to an excellent publication by the Bankers Trust Company, the situation is as follows: The total amount loaned to the Allies by the United States was $11,861,000,000; by Great Britain $11,171,000,000, and by France, $3,464,-000,000. All the Allies, however, except the United States, were borrowers, the leading figures being as follows: Great Britain, $6,489, 000,000; France, $7,020,000,000; Italy, $4,747,-000,000; Russia, $5,736,000,000, and so on. On balance only Great Britain is a creditor nation, like the United States, all the rest being debtors. Great Britain, too, alone among the great powers, is paying its debts, though some of the smaller nations, such as Finland, are also do-

The problem falls naturally into two halves. s the practical question: Is it for the debtor nations to pay these gigantic sums in any reasonable time, and does it pay the creditor nations to receive payment on the terms laid down in the bond? This question arises from the fact that there is no international currency, and that therefore, speaking broadly, the only way in which the debts can be paid is by the export of gold, commodities, or the rendering of services, such as shipping, given by the debtor to the creditor nations without payment.

The difficulty can be seen in its simplest form by considering what happened when the debts were contracted. The enormous loans which the United States made took the form of the export of immense quantities of munitions, food, and supplies for the allied peoples during the war, for which no return traffic was sent. Very broadly, the only way in which repayment can be made is by reversing the stream of traffic and pouring into the United States an equal amount of raw materials, manufactures, etc., though over a longer period of time, also with no export in return. Is it possible for the debtor nations to maintain for years a steady excess of exports over imports sufficient to pay off their debt, without terribly lowering the standard of living of their people, and is it possible for Great Britain and the United States to receive those imports without ruining the industries and multiplying unemployment at home in those trades which manufacture the equivalent goods or which have to find buyers for their products abroad? That is the first question.

The second question is the moral issue involved. Is it right for the creditor nations to exact payment in full? On this point there is a profound difference between the American and the European points of view. The American sense is that the war debts were an ordinary commercial transaction. The Allies were short of money with which to prosecute the war on their own account and they, therefore, borrowed what they needed from Great Britain and the United States. America itself sent 2,000,000 men to Europe and spent more than $22,000,-000,000, a contribution which turned the scales decisively in favor of the Allies. She thinks that that contribution was fully adequate, that if she is liberal in the terms on which repayment is to be made she has done the utmost she can be expected to do, and that her debtors ought to repay their loans in full. The European sense is entirely different. Both as regards their debts to one another and to the United States, the Allies do not consider that the debts were contracted on a commercial basis at all. In their view, from the time each nation entered the war it was engaged upon a common struggle in which each contributed according to its means, and the contribution in lives and devastation, given by one nation, ought to be taken into account as against the contribution in cash and supplies given by another, in determining the final readjustments to be made. That is why there is so much bitterness in Europe about the American attitude. To the European not only is the United States exacting in full the repayment of that part of its contribution to the common victory which is represented by its loans, though Europe cannot claim back the lives it expended for the same purpose while America was preparing to enter the fray, but her action makes it impossible for them to deal with one another on the more generous basis. They are forced to ask of one another what they have to pay to the United States.

It is obvious that both as regards the economic aspect of the interallied debt problem and the moral aspect there are the widest divergences of view. It is certain that there could be nothing worse for the world than that any attempt should be made to settle the problem in an atmosphere of ignorance or recrimination. The first step is manifestly to secure as authoritative a statement of all the facts and of the real economic issues involved as possible for the information of the public opinion of all lands. The course of wisdom would seem to be to remit a preliminary consideration of the whole problem to another "Dawes" Commission.

Piano pedagogues, discussing of late problems arising out of artistic credit and claim,

Piano Pupils

and Their

seem to have encountered certain obstacles that refuse to budge, and to have cleared the way, at the same time, to some very definite understandings. In endeavoring to mark out just what sort of acknowledgment pupils ought to make of their teaching before the public, and to determine just how much notice pupils may properly claim from the public on account of their instruction, they have met insurmountable difficulties, indeed; but they have also reached a concrete solution or two, the correctness of which nobody can deny.

The proposal has been submitted, that aspirants should refrain from making capital of their apprenticeship with this or that master. after being out of his studio, for a space of three years. One word of defense offered for the rule is, that graduates, working so many summers and winters by themselves, should find a line of their own to pursue; a line divergent from the professor's, and significant of another individuality. A second word is, that educational theory may greatly change within such a term. That the formula of the door automatically closing at the end of a fixed period may not savor too much of the irrevocable, a third word is added. Former pupils may go back to school whenever they desire, and may resume the old relation with their teacher.

To consider the matter from the practical, rather than the academic, viewpoint, how many pianists can help proclaiming who taught them, whether they name their teacher in print or not? Scarcely a listener in the concert hall but can tell the tradition that piano interpreters represent, if he but stops to think. And the more distinguished and original artists are, the more easily, oftentimes, can their classification be determined. It may come out, when not intended, in a few casual, preluding chords; it may stick out all over the material of a program. All pupils of Rubinstein have grown away from him no doubt: and many nunils of Leschetizky have strayed off on paths of their own. They are pupils, nevertheless, and recognizably so, of Rubinstein or Leschetizky, as the case may be. In all likelihood, the same thing will happen in time to come, if it has not already happened, with players taught by Godowsky, Ganz, or Schmitz.

Another proposal submitted in the name of the pedagogues is, that pianists who have merely taken a little friendly counsel from a master, or who have sat in the room as observers, while he conducted a class, should abstain from publishing in their announcements: Pupil of So and So. Which not only goes without dispute, but calls for all concert-goers' applause.

Editorial Notes

A reduction in the rate of interest paid to the Government by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, the Boston & Maine and the New Haven railroads on loans made at a time when money was high, is obviously in the public interest. since no good could result from the insolvency of these companies. As Secretary Mellon observed in approving the suggestion, the Government itself is borrowing money at constantly decreasing interest rates. What the federal Treasury is saving on other loans might readily be applied in part to the aid of these three roads in the interest of those who hold their securities, especially in view of the fact that their present predicament is not due to bad management. The proposition entails a reduction to a sum about one-quarter of 1 per cent above what the Government now pays for its own borrowing, and favorable action not only will not involve a loss to the Treasury on the transaction but will materially assist these three important carriers at this time.

While there is without a doubt something to what one speaker said at a meeting held at Londonderry House, London, in aid of the work of the Central Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, that there are two dangers in the work of reclaiming prisoners-emotional optimism and unemotional prejudice—the problem cannot be disposed of in that way. As Sir John Anderson, permanent Under-Secretary of State, said at the same meeting, many of the old notions have gone, prison is no longer regarded as a place of retribution for wrongdoing, nor a place where criminals are put to keep them out of mischief. Rather, he urged, those responsible for the penal system of any enlightened country today are aiming more and more to restore to the prisoners their self-respect that they may be able once more to become useful members of society. The fact cannot be ignored that over 20,000 prisoners, of both sexes and all ages, and irrespective of creed or class distinction, were aided by this society during the last year.

The Outlook for Ramsay MacDonald

By SIR ALFRED ROBBINS

While Britain's late Prime Minister is seeking in the West Indies a rest from his labors, not only his personal friends but his political foes at home are with some eagerness discussing his future. Among both classes are many, with the shallow perception of the average day-to-day politician, who judge only from Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's recent overwhelming electoral defeat, combined with the general method in which he concluded the contest in the country and his earliest subsequent appearance in the Commons. These have jumped to the conclusion that his day as leader of the Parliamentary Labor Party has departed. If they were better acquainted with their country's history, they would

Of recent English statesmen, Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Lloyd George have furnished the most striking instances of the futility of personal prophecy in British politics. When the former was not yet 40, Benjamin Disraeli his instinctive rival, assured his intimates that Gladstone had no future; and Gladstone, in his eighty-third year took the Premiership for the fourth time. He was de clared so often by the temporarily triumphant Tories to be "down and out" that it was difficult to disbelieve them-until he was seen once more leading a great majority.

Mr. Lloyd George has had the like experience, though not as yet for so long. He has shown that he is never so near active revival as when thought by his opponent: to be politically dead. And those who calculate on his being kept permanently in the background now had best be wary of the moment when, without warning, he seizes

A close, while detached, view of Mr. MacDonald's present personal and political position gives cause for emphasizing similar caution. In regard to both these eager, striving, ambitious British politicians—still young as British politicians are counted—the question thus raised is of far wider than national interest, for they have made themselves matter of international concern.

Absorption in foreign affairs to the temporary forgetfulness of things domestic, with the consequence of meddling and muddling by slackly controlled colleagues of less capacity, brought both of them down, as Palmerston and Disraell, their predecessors in the Premiership, had been brought down for the like reason long before them. But, in Mr. MacDonald's case, the very evident strain under which he was working at the time of the election not only resulted in great harm to him at the moment, but is the basis for much of the common belief in a permanent result.

Those alone who were in the inner circles of the parliamentary Labor organization realize the vast num-ber of votes they lost at the October poll because their leader's electoral speeches, which were radiocast over the Kingdom, did not produce the favorable effect they lad hoped would have been the case. They know they would not in any case have won. But their leader's speeches deepened the loss.

As a consequence, a very decided section of the Labor members came to the new House of Commons with the resolve to change the party leadership unless Mr. MacDonald showed clear signs of recovery from his prophecy. The bad electoral form. To the dismay of those friends who await effects.

were prepared to stand by him right through, the longed-for signs were absent from the opening speech of the Parliament.

Members of the old House who, whatever their poiltical opinions, knew and personally liked the late Prime Minister, came out of the chamber disappointed, and some of them dismayed; while the failure of this first effort stimulated the foes of his own household to vigorous, and even venomous, activity. This proved the turning point. Stung by their ingratitude, detesting their intrigue, wounded by the secret hostility of some among even his late ministerial colleagues, Mr. MacDonald roused himself and steadily strengthened his parliamentary position during the brief remainder of the session.

"The Clyde Contingent"-as the extreme Labor sec tion is known-with certain coadjutors from Wales and one from London distinguished for his assertive admiration of the Soviet, were aghast. They were the very peo ple who had placed Mr. MacDonald in the leadership two years before, ejecting the less brilliant but conscientious Mr. Clynes. They thought it certain that precedent now would be followed, and that Mr. MacDonald, if defeat came, would "take it lying down," as Mr. Clynes did. Dismay fell upon them when they realized that, so far from fatally stabbing him in the back, they had forcefully brought him once more into action.

Wrecking tactics may be tried again when Parliament in February reassembles. But Mr. MacDonald has faithful friends as well as domestic foes, some of whom would not, at the moment, like their names made public. And he went to the West Indies with the assurance of the former that, if he should return in a thoroughly rested state, as they all hope he will, there would be no doubt of his remaining leader of the Labor Opposition.

If this hope be realized—as circumstances at the moment appear to promise—the result will be welcomed by those British politicians who can look beyond the party chances of the present to the national conditions of the future.

Mr. MacDonald is one of whom his fellow-countrymen, despite his Socialist activities for a full quarter of a century, know, in reality, singularly little.

They have not realized the atmosphere in which he passed his formative years, largely as a consequence of association with his father-in-law, the late Dr. John Hall Gladstone, for long a well-known figure in London life as chemist, physicist, educationist, and social reformer. In this last capacity Dr. Gladstone started a sort of free thought Sunday school for the poor in and around Lin coln's Inn Fields, one of London's old-time legal cen ters; and in this the young, eager, studious James Ramsay MacDonald became an assiduous voluntary teacher. was thus the future Prime Minister met and won Dr Gladstone's daughter, Margaret, an inspiring and even invigorating figure, not yet fully replaced.

This atmosphere was breathed by the young Scotsman, touched by the dreams as well as the dourness of It is an influence which has to be remembered when either reviewing Mr. MacDonald's past or speculating on his future. Prejudice should have no place in prophecy. The wise are those who study causes and

The Week in New York

Some of the grand machinery of diplomacy and some cogs of government may have been set in motion here this week to provide for the peace and comfort of the elephant seals, sea lions and giant tortoises of the Pacific. diminishing but very select colony of about 150 elephant seals around Guadaloupe Island/ the equally distinguished and perhaps even more venerable glant tortoises of Galapagos; and the harassed sea lions off the coast of British Columbia, Washington and Oregon, were severally the subjects of resolutions to promote their welfare adopted amid applause at the banquet at the Waldorf Astoria of 1600 members of the New York Zoological

If the elephant seals realized that the Mexican Govern ment was to hear about their need for protection, and the sea lions, that the Canadian and American Governments were to be asked to stop the machine-gun and mining attacks on them, and the tortoises, that their dignified but unequal struggle against the Ecuadorian settlers and their pigs was to be ended by removal to more hospitable quarters, perhaps they all might think that there was some virtue in representation without taxation. The torfoises might even think, reminiscently, how much better behaved were the present generation of people than their great-great-grandfathers.

No other eclipse, it can safely be said, since that famous one of Mark Twain's, which established the "Yankee" as Sir Boss of the Court of King Arthur, has been so well promoted as the one to come next Saturday. Radio tests have been prepared, photographers are rehearsing their acts, of which the principal performance is to last a bare half minute or so, and air pilots who will carry photographers are planning to race along the path of the shadow. Railroads are announcing special train services to vantage points, and the New Haven Railroad has issued a special map showing how to go by its lines to places in the region of totality, which seems likely to leave "standing room only" in the pastures of Connecticut. New York City will be cut about in half by the path. The southern edge of the shadow will miss all but the ragged edges of Brooklyn, and cross Manhattan Island above One Hundred and Tenth Street.

Since the United States has learned in the last few years that the only gold that really glitters is the gold that is but working, extra attention has been paid to what is happening to the large supply here. period from Dec. 1 to the middle of this week, it has been noticed, India has purchased in New York the exceptionally high total of $23,000,000 worth. The current planation is that recent successful crops have made the Indian natives prosperous, and that they wish to hoard this symbol of their wealth. But Mr. S. H. Mehta, one of the Indian secretaries at International House here, claims that this is only the superficial phase of the explanation. This importation of gold by India in return for her surplus exports, he says, is undesirable: for India would like other exporting countries and leave her surplus to build up foreign investments, except that the absence of a native Indian diplomatic and consular service, which is vital for foreign investments, prevents the Indians from gaining the necessary confidence. No international problem, however, it may be surmised, is ever quite simple as either of these explanations would have this one. The fact, nevertheless, that the Indian nationalists perceive the waste in their country's importation of gold, suggests that ways are beginning to occur to their countrymen for making their wealth work

Alexander P. Moore, the American Ambassador to Spain, who returned this week for a vacation, is one of the most skillful practitioners of the new school of open quite an art that has had to be veloped by diplomatists to avoid saying anything that might seem meddlesome to the nations to which they are accredited, and yet give the appearance of geniality and expansiveness toward their newspaper interviewers. Mr. Moore has the way. Coming into port here, or calling at the White House, where he runs a gantlet of reorters, he will talk for half an hour with a delightful fluency, all the while giving his interviewers nothing but a picture of Spanish court dress or some quaint custom of the country. Any one who tries to turn the more serious subjects, is promptly squelched by the other interviewers. At a time like this. when Spain is much in the thought of the world, and when the situation calls for a corresponding increase in tact, there are few other persons among those currently interviewed who could have come into New York as talkatively as Mr. Moore did, without giving a bit

One of the early blossoms, perhaps, of the growing interest in free political discussion in the United States the Town Hall of New York City, which became the debt-free home of the League for Political Education this week when the mortgages on it for $800,000 were publicly burned. This graceful and inviting building represents the fulfillment of the idea put forth twelve ears ago with the backing of her own funds by Mrs. William H. Bliss. The ceremony of burning the mortgages marked the end of a four years' campaign which enlisted the support of 3000 citizens of New York in enabling the building to be supported from its own rentals. Under the broad policy of the league and its director, Robert Erskine Ely, it is already becoming a metropolis of opinion. Providing, too, the opportunity for political debate, it can hardly fail to stimulate the habit of thorough and wholesome discussion; and stimulating this, it must help in steering the course between those two mistakes against which John Stuart Mill cautioned, "ignoran: change," and "ignorant fear of change.

"What's Wrong With Prohibition?"

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor

Your recent editorial, entitled "What's Wrong With Prohibition?" is indeed interesting and I agree with it absolutely. You say, in closing, that "the only trouble is in the lack of that complete enforcement which would multiply in nearly every community the blessings that have already been realized." Very good!

Well, why should there be trouble? Does it cost mil lions to enforce the law against the counterfeiting of money? I think not, but there is a penalty for that crime What penalty is there for making or selling "booze" Why, simply a few months' sentence in prison or a finemostly a suspended sentence.

Has any President of the United States really tried to enforce the law? Has he called Congress together and asked it to fix penalties that would deter men from laughing at the law? Has he appointed real, genuine men to positions in connection with the enforcement of the prohibition law, and given them real instructions to enforce the law? Has he issued a proclamation calling upon all citizens to obey it and to do so now? Officers wink at the law and "stand in" with lawbreakers and bootleggers are not officers.

There is nothing the matter either with prohibition or with its enforcement except pure neglect or half-hearted support in enforcement. There is no need to spend mil-lions of money each year to enforce any law that is a part of the Constitution.

Let the newspapers of the United States take up law enforcement as vigorously as they do the printing of crime, and let them urge an amendment to the law, making it a penitentiary offense of a serious nature, with its attendant penalty, as in the case of counterfeiting money and all will be well. There is not much counterfeiting of money as compared with the amount in ? Because people do not get away with it easily Richmond, Va.

"Ireland's Opportunity"

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor

Having appreciated the fairness and moderation of the able editorial, entitled, "Ireland's Opportunity," which appeared in the Monitor of Nov. 8, 1 was less favorably the letter commenting on it, and signed E. H-P.," which was printed on Dec. 10. The writer of this letter states that he knows "many Protestants on both sides of the present border who neither support the Belfast Government's attitude on the boundary question nor agree with" (what he terms) "the selfish policy of

As a Protestant resident for over 20 years in the midland counties of Southern Ireland, I wish to emphasize my complete agreement with the Ulster policy of passive resistance to Southern encroachments, and to say that, assuredly, this view is unanimous among all Irish

I find it difficult to comprehend the point of view of "an Irish Protestant who has no sympathy with the claims of the Belfast Government," considering that, among all the nations of our civilization, Ulster stands pre-eminently for Protestantism.

From a Lover of Birds and Animals

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

Please allow me to thank you kindly for the many articles which have appeared at different times in the Monitor in behalf of birds and animals. I wish, however, particularly to mention two such: one in the issue of Dec. 26, which dealt with the gift of land to the elk herds of Wyoming, and another in the Issue of Dec. 29, dealt with the restoration of Lower Klamath Lake as a refuge for birds.

I feel sure that lovers of birds and animals, and those interested in their welfare, read these articles with appreciation and were grateful that such humane organizations, which have the interest of birds and animals at heart, exist.
